Welcome everyone to the second year of our Preparing Future Teachers in Trauma-Informed Practices newsletter. We are sending well wishes at the start of what is a challenging school year for many.

Updates:

Our Trauma-Informed Practices website is up and running! Please view and share widely.

Thank you to those of you who attended our Resilience movie screening and panel. The virtual event was a huge success and had over 160 attendees. Didn’t get a chance to attend? Click here to find information on how to view the recording.

This school year we are providing a Resilient Futures train-the-trainer program to MSU Denver School of Education staff and faculty who would like to become trained in the HEARTS model. We are excited to grow our expertise in trauma-informed practices.

Upcoming Events:

SCHOOL OF EDUCATION FACULTY, STAFF, STUDENTS, ALUM & MENTOR TEACHERS:

You have the opportunity to attend a FREE 4-part professional learning series on creating trauma-informed and equitable learning environments. Email tip@msudenver.edu for more information if you’d like to attend.

TIP strategies for the classroom:

Predictability is important for all kids, and particularly those who are struggling after experiencing trauma. Predictability helps kids know what is coming next, which in turn helps them feel safe. Giving specific expectations around time is one way to integrate this trauma-informed practice in the classroom. For example, instead of saying “I’ll check on you in a few minutes”, say “I’ll check on you in seven-minutes”.
