Discussion- Pressure to Achieve

Being an international student is no doubt, an enriching experience. Moving from the comfort of your own home to an entirely new country to pursue your degree has its perks. You gain the opportunity to immerse yourself into a new culture, acquire boundless knowledge, meet new people, make connections, and establish yourself in a new world.

However, no situation is perfect. And while studying abroad has its pros something that should be talked about is the pressure many international students feel to succeed. Studying abroad is a huge investment for some. You may feel as though you must do everything just right- perfect even or you won't achieve your goals. - Maybe there's a lot riding on your academic performance-; you may feel the need to work harder than your peers because there is more on the line; there are so many factors that can come into play. While there is nothing wrong with having a good drive, putting too much pressure on yourself results in burn out which ultimately leads you to doing the exact thing you were attempting to avoid.

"Failure should be our teacher, not our undertaker. Failure is delay, not defeat. It is a temporary detour not a dead end. Failure is something we can avoid only by saying nothing, doing nothing, and being nothing." - Denis Waitley

Studying abroad is an amazing opportunity. But you should not let fear of failure, disappointment, or worry in general stop you from having the best experience possible. You can achieve your goals without burdening yourself with the weight of the world. You are doing the best you can, and your best is always enough. Be proud of how far you have come and all that you have achieved to be in your present position.
