Please review the following brief bio statements from the Team of IDI Qualified Administrators and select who you want to conduct your individual IDI debrief session with. You need to complete your one on one debrief between 10/1/23 and 11/30/23, so please sign up ASAP for a debrief date. If you select an IDI QA and the calendar link doesn't work, that QA's calendar is full and you will need to select another QA. Click on the link under the IDI QA's brief bio to select a one-hour debrief session on their calendar. Your individual reports will be emailed to you the day before the debrief session.

Kyana Bell (she/her) | Research Coordinator III for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver, Graduate School of Social Work.

I am a black American and cis-gender female. I honor myself, my communities, and my ancestors by doing my part to work towards a just, equitable society in which all children and families are able to flourish. I believe that personal growth is a continuous process, and my commitment to and transformation during my personal growth journey inspires me to help guide others along theirs. The IDI is an incredibly insightful tool and I look forward to embarking on this journey with you.

Lara Bruce (she/her) | MSW, Project Director, CCWSC for MSU Denver, Social Work Department.

I am a white, straight, cisgender female. I have been a social worker supporting children- and family-serving workforce for about 15 years. I believe that true partnership occurs when people are able to bring their authentic selves to the table. I recognize the immense amount of privilege that I hold in our society. The IDI has supported my intercultural development through its emphasis on learning from my own experiences and channeling that privilege into support for others interested in building their own intercultural awareness. The IDI has been a powerful tool on this journey!

Kristin Clark (she/her) | Senior Program Associate for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver, Graduate School of Social Work.

I am a white, cisgender, queer woman living in South Carolina. I have both lived and professional experiences that inform my work as a whole. I believe in collective liberation and our need for community-based, collaborative practices that allow us to live into co-creating this liberation. I think that the IDI is a tool for reflecting on our own experiences and how they inform our current worldview while actively working to expand that view and integrate what's discovered. I look forward to learning together.

Christa Doty (she/her) | MSW, LCSW, CPCC, PCC, Child Welfare Stipend Coordinator for University of Denver, Graduate School of Social Work.

I am a white, straight, cisgender female just starting the latter part of my career. I have officially been a social worker since 1997 but my mom would say I have been one my whole life. Dismantling racism and creating a just world where people can live their authentic truth has been a guiding value in my life, that is ever evolving on how to advocate and live this value. The IDI has been a profound tool in this journey allowing me to understand myself and others at a deeper level, ability of people to grow and change.

Rachel Fore (she/her) | MBA, Senior Program Associate for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver, Graduate School of Social Work.

I am a Cherokee straight, cisgender woman working in child welfare work for the last 7 years. This work allows me to engage in deeply meaningful work in and around Native communities. As a woman walking in both worlds most of my life, I am committed to equitable and just systems. Being able to participate in the IDI work is something that promotes growth for myself and connection to others as they come to understand their own opportunities for growth.

Michael Holcombe (he/him) | MSW, IDI QA, Research Coordinator for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver

I am a gay, white, cisgender man from rural Appalachia with ADHD. I have spent most of my life working in non-profits and social justice organizations. My goal is to help create an equitable society through community, and collaboration. I believe understanding ourselves and our relationships with others is key to building an equitable society and the IDI is a great tool to help start that journey.

Kavitha Kailasam (she/her) | Senior Program Associate for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver, Graduate School of Social Work

I am a straight, cisgender, Indian American child of immigrants. I have spent most of my life in spaces as a racial, ethnic, and religious minority, leading to my deep sensitivity to the experience of the "other." My professional and educational background is in community development and partnership, and I have worked across a variety of sectors, both internationally and locally. I pursue equity, inclusion, diversity, and justice in every space of my life, and am working to grow in my capacity to contribute toward a more just and equitable world. I find joy in designing spaces, systems, practices, and tools that help us honor all people and perspectives. I believe the IDI can be a meaningful tool in initiating conversations and nurturing our individual and collective growth.

Sommer Purdom | (she/her) MSW, TPC, Program Associate for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver, Graduate School of Social Work

I am a straight, cisgender, Cherokee woman. I came to Butler Institute for Families after nearly two decades of Child Welfare experience where I learned the value of people and how powerful our voice is. I am devoted to the systemic changes needed to make a more equitable, safe, inclusive, and diverse environment for children, family and community. I enjoy getting to work with diverse groups of people and learning what values, attitudes and beliefs guide them in honoring themselves and others. I am a lifelong learner and appreciate that the IDI gives me the opportunity to learn and grow personally and to walk alongside others as they choose to experience personal and professional growth.

Brooke Rohde (she/her) | MA (Anthropology), Project Manager, CCWSC

I am a white, cisgender, straight female. I came to CCWSC after 15 years at the University of Denver working with students in anthropology and museums. I believe the world will be a better place when we truly listen to and learn from those around us. The IDI has been a powerful tool in challenging myself to do just that, while reflecting on how my actions & attitudes can help create a more just society. I look forward to meeting you & helping you start your IDI journey!

Carole Wilcox (she/her) | MSW, LSW, IDI QA, Director of Operations for Butler Institute for Families at University of Denver

I am white and cis-gender female-identifying. I enjoy using my child welfare experience to support the upcoming and current workforce through organizational improvements that create transformative supports and services for families. I believe we can create equitable spaces by embracing our differences and intersectionalities through true community partnerships and individual growth. I think the IDI is a powerful tool for personal growth and organizational improvement.
